

From the Louisville Bulletin,
The Halcyon Days.

BY JULIA PLEASANT GREENWELL.

The Evil days have folded up their wings;
They troop not sad and slowly by me now;
At last the viewless race of crownless kings
Appear with diadems on every brow.

The Halcyon Days are on the summer sea,
The Pleiads pale have sunk beneath the wave;
No more their tear-drops tremble fast and free,
But joyous stars reclaim the blue concave.

The Halcyon Days are on the summer sea,
Forever flies those worn-eyed sisters seven;
Soft, soft and calm the storm-tost billows be,
And bright and pure the long distracted heaven.

No more the mourner Sun his weary round
Leads, dragging clanking chains, and shedding
Tears.

But like a bridegroom from the blue profound,
His glittering crest of burnished gold appears.

The Halcyon Days are on the summer sea,
The circling gulls paint the shining waves,
The purple shell-fish gambols light and free,
And sea-stars gaily light their coral caves.

My fragile shallop fearless sweeps the tides,
For summer zephyrs fan her silvery sail;
While summer billows kiss her arrowy sides,
And lull to slumber every rising gale.

The silver lute makes music in my heart;
Its golden tountrout through the sunlight sings;
The chorists of the Evil Days depart,
And Halcyon Days unfurl their rainbow wings.

In thee, oh God! my joyous heart would trust,
And yield its homage to thy wise control,
Thou Animator of this breathing dust—
The wondrous Framer of the human soul.

From the Cincinnati Commercial,
THE DREAM.

BY ALFRED BURNETT.

In the shadowy land of dreams last night,
I wandered lone with thee;
Together roamed we hand in hand,
In cloudless Italy.

We stood upon the Bridge of Sighs,
Where Byron stood of yore,
And where in sweetest poetry,
His thoughts he did outpour.

We heard the singing Gondolier,
As rowed he o'er the wave;
And saw fair ladies with their knights,
The noble and the brave.

We heard the songs that Tasso wrote
When Venice yet was free;
And saw the lion of St. Marc
Wave proud and loftily.

We roamed beneath the trellised bowers,
And sat beneath their shade;
A world of happiness was ours—
We thought could never fade.

I told thee tales of other days—
Tales of that cloudless clime;
And eagerly you listened, love,
To story and to rhyme.

I told thee of the mighty deed,
The noble deeds they'd done;
And all the many victories
In battles they had won.

And then I pointed out their graves,
Where they in quiet sleep;
But ah! the story made me sad—
I turned to see thee weep.

But when I told of Tasso's wrongs,
Who Leonora loved,
With pitying spirit and deepest love
Was thy and spirit moved;

You could not bear to hear me tell
Of all the cruel wrong
Her lordly brother heaped upon
This peerless child of song.

But did I tell of faithful love;
I told thee then of mine,
And then my lips without reproof,
My love, were pressed to thine.

And then beneath Italian skies,
Her skies of cloudless blue,
I told thee of undying love,
And fond affection true.

Upon my breast thy head was laid,
My arms were round thee thrown,
I heard thee tremblingly confess
Thy love was all my own;

And then—oh! why did I sleep,
My downy couch forsake!
But surely all was not a dream,
I love thee when awake.

And though Italian skies are bright,
And though her roses were brave,
I'd sooner dwell 'neath our own stars,
Where freedom's banners wave.

For in Columbia's land are bowers,
And glorious rolling streams,
As ere, my love, I saw last night,
In shadowy land of dreams.

Wife-Poisoning Case—Green Guilty.

The trial of Geo. W. Green, a wealthy banker at Chicago, charged with the murder of his wife, by poison, has been brought to a close. A portion of the testimony was peculiar, and worth looking over.

Mrs. Noble, the sister of the deceased, gave strong evidence in favor of her brother-in-law, Mr. Green. She said: "I saw my sister out riding on horseback with Mr. Green almost every evening; I am sure about that; I saw this for a month or six weeks; this was in June and first of July; sometimes in a carriage, and generally after tea; they rode past all our houses; generally rode slow past our houses, and if she saw us she would nod; she was dressed in a riding habit, with a cap and feathers; she looked pretty well."

A question arose during the direct examination of Mrs. Noble, as to any utterances of an unchaste nature made toward her by the prisoner. Objected to by defense, and argued at length by the counsel. The Court ruled that the testimony sought to be introduced was inadmissible.
